

Five-Spot Planting Guide

About Five-Spot

These blooms are hardy, trailing, annual flowers native to California, but will grow prolifically throughout the rest of the United States as well. An extremely colorful wildflower that is rather easy to grow, Five Spot remains one of our favorite all-purpose wildflowers!

When to Plant

Sow directly once the threat of frost has passed. Five Spot also does great in containers. For growers in Zones cooler than 7, Five Spot will need to be started indoors 6-8 weeks before the final frost of spring.

Where to Plant

Five Spot does best in cooler climates with full sun conditions, though it can tolerate partial shade. In warmer climates, Five Spot benefits from partial shade.

How to Plant

Prepare your planting site with loosened soil that is weed free. Sow onto the surface of the soil, and compress firmly. Don't cover, as seeds require sunlight to germinate.

Caring for Five-Spot

Remove weeds as Five Spot is establishing. Once established they require little care. As tender annuals, Five Spot will die off with the killing frost.
