

Freesia Planting Guide

About Freesia

With lovely double blooms and a wonderful scent, Freesias are absolutely showstopping. This mix is sure to brighten up your planting area with its assorted bright colors. Freesia bulbs do exceptionally well in the garden, in containers indoors, and as cut flower arrangements.

When to Plant

Plant Freesia bulbs in April or May, after the threat of frost has passed, when planting outdoors. They can be started in March or April if planting indoors or in a greenhouse.

Fall planting is only recommended for zones 9-12. Colder zones must lift bulbs before final frost.

If planting in the fall, do so at least 4 weeks before your last frost date.

Where to Plant

Freesia require full sun conditions, with well-draining soil, that's ideally neutral to alkaline.

How to Plant

Prepare your planting area by loosening your soil to a depth of 8". Plant freesia bulbs in groups, about 2" deep, and with 2" of spacing between plants.

Caring for Freesia

Freesia will need some sort of support in order to stay upright, whether planted directly in the soil or in pots. Cut off faded flowers at the base of the stem, but leave green foliage in place to extend the life of your freesia. They are not winter-hardy in nearly any U.S. zone, and won't survive frost.
